

Alpine School Model

Within the framework of the mountain-oriented education, the Alpine School Model (ASM), addresses the following issues relating to sustainable development in the Alpine region :

- the cultural and ethical-social values that are mobilized in sustainability processes
- the need for local context and training based on priority themes for sustainability
- skills, knowledge, attitudes for individuals to build sustainable Alpine communities
- the most effective teaching and educational methods in the acquisition of these skills
- the necessary and concrete tools to incite change within individuals and communities in favor of sustainability.

The Alpine School Model supports schools and organizations involved in non-formal educational methods to create dialogue and collaboration between each other.

OurAlps, international network of mountain-oriented education in the Alps

OurAlps connects professionals working in the field of education with the goal of developing and promoting mountain-oriented education in Alpine areas. In this context, stakeholders can exchange ideas, approaches, visions, resources and tools with whom professionals can develop joint projects at an international level. Furthermore, OurAlps' purpose is to raise awareness among different target audiences about the Alps, including its cultural and natural heritage and issues. The international network is also aimed directly at young people to facilitate their involvement in projects and raise their awareness of their environment.
